NISD's Names New Director of College and Career Readiness

Northwest ISD is pleased to announce the hiring of Kyle Seipp as the new director of college and career readiness.

“Mr. Seipp brings his exceptional educational leadership to Northwest ISD,” says Superintendent of Schools Karen G. Rue, Ed.D. “We are excited to have him re-join the NISD team to serve the students as they prepare for their future.”

Seipp has recently served at the University of Texas in Austin at the Institute of Public School Initiatives. At the institute, Seipp worked in partnership with school districts to achieve College Readiness goals and instill fidelity of implementation of the Design Principles of Early College High School while building capacity and enhancing productivity. Previously, he was a high school mathematics teacher and coach at Northwest High School for several years between 2005-2010.

A brand new position at NISD, the director of college and career readiness will oversee the development, implementation, assessment and continuous improvement of programs aimed at increasing student access to post-secondary education and employment opportunities.

“I am beyond excited to return to the best team in the nation,” says Seipp. “I look forward to enhancing opportunities for the students at NISD. Northwest made it possible for me to be able to excel in my position at the university, and I am excited to be back.”

Seipp holds a bachelor's degree in mathematics from Texas State University and a master's in educational leadership from Lamar University. He has also received both his principal and superintendent certificates. Seipp will start his position as director of college and career readiness in July.
